OpenMath is a standard for representing mathematical data in as unambiguous a way as possible. It can be used to exchange mathematical objects between software packages or via email, or as a persistent data format in a database. It is tightly focussed on representing semantic information and is not intended to be used directly for presentation, although tools exist to facilitate this. Since 1997 its development has been partially funded by the European Union under a multimedia ESPRIT project. The ...

This paper discusses an interface between the Java and APL languages. It is in the form of a report on some technology that has been developed for SHARP APL, though there are no aspects of the technology that are particularly special to that dialect of APL. The interface (called, for the purposes of this paper, the "APL-Java Interface") is a general facility for allowing APL programs and Java programs to work together. The project was started because it occurred to us that there is now a substant ...

This work gives an overview of a new technology that is attracting growing interest in public as well as in the computer industry itself. The visible difference from other technologies is in the use of a pen or pencil as the primary means of interaction between a user and a machine, picking up the familiar pen and paper interface metaphor. From this follows a set of consequences that will be analyzed and put into context with other emerging technologies and visions. Starting with a short historic ...

12 Power to the people: end-user building of digital library collections

◆ Ian H. Witten, David Bainbridge, Stefan J. Boddie

Naturally, digital library systems focus principally on the reader: the consumer of the material that constitutes the library. In contrast, this paper describes an interface that makes it easy for people to build their own library collections. Collections may be built and served locally from the user's own web server, or (given appropriate permissions) remotely on a shared digital library host. End users can easily build new collections styled after existing ones from material on the Web o ...
